

Book Drive FAQs

nextdoor
— Books for Kids —

What types of books do you accept?

- Books for 0-5 year old's
- Multicultural books
- Books from our Amazon Wish List
- Popular children's books
- Social emotional books

What don't you accept?

- Books that are falling apart
- Books with torn/missing pages
- Books that have been colored or written in
- Water damaged books
- Discarded books from public or school libraries
- Books with "adult" themes
- Books that are mildewed

How do I decide if a book is too damaged to donate to Next Door?

As a rule, we always say: Would you feel comfortable gifting the book to a friend or family member? If not, then we won't accept it either. It's probably best to recycle.

What do I do if people donate books Next Door can't use, such as adult, or damaged books?

These can be donated to a local charity or Half Price Books or recycled.

Where should I set up my book bin?

High traffic areas are best- the easier it is for people to make their donation the more books you will collect. This could mean on your front porch, in a break room or entry way at work, or by the front door at school.

How should I promote my book drive?

Word of mouth, social media, and putting up the poster provided a week before your book drive starts

Can I do my book drive as a group?

Absolutely! Make copies of the information in your pack and have multiple people take part. The more donation locations the more books you will collect!

Do the books I donate have a cash value for Next Door?

Yes! For every brand-new book Next Door can access $5 of funding. For every gently-used book we get $3. So not only are you providing books for our children, you are raising vital funds for our day-to-day programming.

Why do I need to log my hours?

These also have a cash value for Next Door. For every hour you spend organizing, promoting, and sorting books for your drive, Next Door can access $22.24.
